

I designed my mighty mouse to work for my small, wide hands. The support is mainly on my fingers where I need it. Whenever I use mice, I find my fingers cramping up a lot because of the way I have to hold the mouse. My palm also does not really rest on the mouse at all which is perfect for me. I have autism and have several sensory issues, one of those issues is things touching my palms. Considering mice can get sweaty after use, normal mice can be a sensory nightmare for me. Often I use a normal mouse sideways to avoid this sensory hell. The way i designed the mouse ensures little contact on my palm.
